Whilst working on her own project Jo is collaborating with songwriters & artists (co-writes include Iain Archer, ex Snow Patrol) and is involved in projects with RCA, Decca & Sony. Jo has a studio and writing facility, she also produces, plays guitars saxophones and keys. She has a passion for guitar bands as well as acoustic songs & ballads and is adept at topline writing. Embracing the independent music model she now controls most of her masters and publishing and is able to offer "one stop licensing" for TV & Film music supervisors.

Starting with a classical background, she studied saxophone at the Conservatoire in Lyon and Paris. On meeting (then unknown) fellow student Benjamin Biolay (French star who has worked with Carla Bruni, Chiara Mastroianni, Henri Salvador & Julien Clerc) she rebelled from her classical training, grabbed a guitar and embraced the dark side of rock' n' roll gigging and songwriting as a singer-songwriter. Inspired by The Beatles & the emerging explosive Brit Pop scene she returned to London and formed her band "Aviation Blonde" before going solo. Her first self-titled album is produced by Grammy award winning producer Steve Levine which she released on her own label Big Crow recordings in 2003. The single "Take Me Home" was released in 2007 produced by Benjamin Biolay and was featured in a major Irish charity campaign. She has been featured live
